Abstract

This work aims to identify the degree of innovation management with respect to the implementation of digital tools as a competitive strategy of the SMEs of the gastronomic sector of Playas de Rosarito Baja California. With the application of the descriptive-agglomerative longitudinal method. The data collection technique was the structured survey with a Cronbach alpha of 0.89, applied to a sample of 150 micro-enterprises in the locality. The analysis of the data was performed by using the SPSS statistical package, dendrogram and tree maps. The most representative findings of this study show that social networks such as Facebook and Instagram are the most effective; because they are the ones that come directly to their target market, which in turn become their best allies by having a satisfactory experience; which translates to recommending to their family and friends such establishment.
