Life after a traumatic brain injury

Shane Booth

Motivational Speaker, Self Employed, United Kingdom

The man that speaks” derived from the fact that, for three months following a major life -threatening motorbike accident that I had on the 5th August, 2009 at a place called Baden-Baden in Germany. I couldn’t even speak let alone string a sentence together. This accident left me fighting for my life, with several broken limbs and a traumatic brain injury, and ultimately leaving me disabled and unable to return to work. I’ve now recovered such that I’ve recently embarked on my public speaking journey, where I hope to educate and inspire others, that just because you are disabled and can’t return to work, life doesn’t necessarily have to stop.
